

From: Bert Han
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 1/23/02 6:38pm
Subject: Microsoft Settlement

The currently proposed settlement restricts free trade. A true sign of monopolistic practices, is when companies no longer have to innovate, and force consumers to use products which lack quality.

Microsoft's products consistantly are released in poor condition. The only time where Microsoft has to innovate is when they are under direct competition. And to help them win, they'll use illegal procedures to thwart their competitors. If you'll notice, after they "win" their products will start to, well, suck.

If America is to truly stay ahead of the economic market, we need innovation, not bloated, anticompetitive actions. It won't help us to compete with emerging markets.

Bert Han

p.s. i update my webpage by wednesday every week. the address is <http://www.geocities.com/berthan26>

"I believe in Christianity as I believe that the sun has risen, not only because I see it, but because by it I see everything else." C.S. Lewis